

Indiana's Telephone Privacy Act needs to remain in tact the way it is currently set up. Making changes to weaken the Act would be a grave mistake. Companies have other ways to contact consumers then over the phone, it just takes some creative blood. It is been very comforting knowing that when I get home after a long day, I won't be bombarded with calls the remainder of the evening. Leave the act in force as it currently sits- and for once, force the corporations to work a little harder to get our business.
